If you value rural tourism as you should, and recognise it's vital contribution to the local economy, you will fear the proposed plans to investigate the Forest of Dean and Wye valley for shale gas. This geologically unstable region is even less suitable than most for this invasive, dangerous method of energy production, and should be conclusively ruled out as having potential for gas exploration.

September 2016