My view as a Northern Irish woman is that abortion law in NI should not be changed.

There ought to be some moral standards in society which are not up for discussion or change. It should never be debatable whether or not it is acceptable to take the life of another! It is not, and it will never be acceptable – our laws should reflect this!! To say that an unborn child can be killed because of it's mother's rights is simply wrong. Any debate which suggests otherwise is dangerous and opens the way for murder – it could then be argued that any human being who has a negative impact on the life of another could be fair game for the adult equivalent of ‘abortion’.

The NI and UK government have a responsibility to protect the ‘innocent and vulnerable’. They may grow up to thank you.
