1) DEVOLUTION
As a woman from Northern Ireland I would like this issue to be addressed by politicians from Northern Ireland - I realise Stormont is not sitting at the minute but none of the members of the Women’s and Equality Committee are from or elected by people from Northern Ireland.

2) DISTINCTIVE LAW AND CULTURE
I think that people with disabilities are valued and important members of our community. They are not someone to be ashamed of or hidden away and yet you want to give women the right to kill them before they are born. Shame on you if that is the case that you cannot fight for the rights of the most vulnerable in our community whether they are inside or outside the womb.

3) HUMAN RIGHTS & EQUALITY
The right of women to have an abortion as a human right surely flies in the face of the right to life of an unborn women. Surely in this day and age we as women need to learn better ways to stand up for each other than killing babies We need to learn to cherish life and each other. Equality is a great thing but my rights are not more important than anyone else’s. We have become a society that cares more about self and our rights than others. I understand there are times when having a baby are difficult and traumatic but is killing that baby always the answer. Maybe we need to start looking for better solutions than murder. Maybe we need to start treating people with care and compassion and top treating unborn children as commodities. I believe that ALL lives matter and that we need to find better ways to deal with our issues than destroying lives
