Written submission from Mr Andrew Patrick (WHC0051)

The appallingly low representation of women is one of several glaring faults in our “democratic” system.

But this fault can be simply, and permanently, corrected.

Whatever electoral method is used – FPTP, STV, AV etc – each constituency needs to be big enough to elect two MPs. On Election day electors have two votes, and are presented with two candidate lists (one male, one female).

Result:- 50/50 male & female MPs. Job done!
