I believe that if someone contributes to a company pension scheme, it is the employer’s responsibility to ensure that funds are made available in order to facilitate that pension being paid.

Any alteration to this means that their historic remuneration has not been paid correctly and therefore the Pension regulator should have the ability to use powers to sequestrate funds and assets from all present and past directors and shareholders to ensure that pensions will be paid correctly.

Failure for any company to do this would in effect be not making payments due on time or correctly.

The Pension Regulator should be given more powers if this is not currently possible & it should be retrospective.
